Featured Saints of the Week

St. Clelia Barberi (1847-1870)

Feast Day: July 13

Clelia was born in Bologna, Italy to parents who were manual laborers. Despite her parents' poverty, she was raised in a pious household where religious education was imparted to her. Her father died from the plague while Clelia was still young, but Clelia started working alongside her mother, spinning hemp to help support her siblings.

About two years later, Clelia joined "The Workers of Christian Catechism." She began as a teacher's assistant, but was such an inspirational teacher that the parish priest entrusted her with the teaching of Church doctrine to the students.

Over the years, Clelia received some offers of marriage, which she turned down because she felt that she was being called to live a pious life of service.

At the age of 21, she founded the Congregation of Little Sisters of Our Lady of Sorrows. This made her the youngest foundress of a religious community in the history of the Catholic Church. The group's work was to minister to the poor and the sick in the local area; they often faced public ridicule for their piety. When their food supply dwindled, Clelia led prayers to St. Francis of Paola, and their shelves were replenished.

Clelia died in 1870 at age 23 from tuberculosis. About a year after her death, unusual and unexplained recurrences have often been reported in various parishes that she'd visited and in the houses where her order is located. Her (singing) voice is often heard during scriptural readings and songs; this voice never speaks alone, but is heard as part of a group. It has been heard by people from various backgrounds, and it's described to be unlike anything they've ever heard!

Her prophecy of the order continuing to grow, has been and continues to be true. There are now 246 community houses that extend throughout Italy, India, and Tanzania.
